Several years ago, the Social Work Program was involved in a university wide major reorganization of colleges, departments and programs. The Social Work Program was moved from the College of Arts and Sciences to a new department, the Department of Human Development, which was placed within the College of Education. This move has brought about the necessity of revamping goals and objectives to some extent to achieve conformity with other similar programs within the department as well as with the College of Education. This reorganization has led to a reworking of the goals and objectives of the program as well as methods of assessment. As the program is also involved in the reaffirmation of accreditation process with the Council on Social Work Education, the program faculty have availed themselves of this opportunity to revisit the goals and objectives of the program and to develop assessment methods that will ensure the most accurate results possible. For this reason some of the newly developed assessment methods listed do not yet have data to assess outcomes.
