Executive Summary

In the Fall of 2011 the Office of Institutional Research & Assessment conducted a survey of students who are taking longer than four years to complete a baccalaureate degree at Southeastern Louisiana University. The intent of the survey is to gather information on “Extender Students” (students who take more than four years to graduate) and why it is taking them longer to graduate.

The telephone survey included 232 students in the Fall 2006 cohort who were enrolled as an undergraduate at Southeastern in Fall 2010. The survey covered four general areas of questioning: student satisfaction with various services provided by the University, reasons why it was taking longer, whether it was a problem to take more than four years to complete their degree, how extender students spent their time, and demographic information not readily available in the Student Record System.

Some of the highlights of the Extender Student Survey are:

- Overall, extender students are satisfied with the services provided by the University such as library resources, friendliness of faculty and staff, and technology resources. The area extender students appeared least satisfied with was “Availability of courses needed for graduation” and they were most satisfied with the Library resources.
- Of the thirty-five possible reasons presented to the participants, “You changed majors” was the reason most cited (70.7%) as a reason for not graduating in four years. Other reasons that received a high percentage were “You had trouble completing all of your major field courses because some of them are/were not offered during the semesters you needed them” , “You had trouble completing all of your major field courses because of scheduling conflicts”, and “You had to drop courses because you were dissatisfied with the teacher”.
- Thirty-three percent (33.2%) of the participants stated that taking more than four years to graduate was a “Not at all a Problem”, and five percent (4.7%) stated it was a “Major Problem”.
- Extender students, in a typical week, spend a large portion of their time working for pay. Other activities engaged in during the week are time spent interacting with and caring for their family, classes/labs, and studying/homework. Many respondents also indicated that they spent much of their week socializing with friends.

Introduction

An issue that has always been of concern on college campuses nationwide is graduation rates. Traditionally, federal and state legislatures, along with the general public, view the baccalaureate degree as a four-year degree. State mandates and accountability measures are causing this issue to be an even greater concern; if students are not graduating within four years it is then perceived that the university must not be meeting the needs of the students and/or has problems. The IPEDS Graduation Rate Survey allows reporting of students who graduate up to six years after starting. However, six years is considered to be 150% of the normal time required to complete a baccalaureate degree.

One of the realities of increasing the time-to-degree is the financial burden to both students (or their parents) and the state. The state of Texas estimated in 1996 that the cost to students (or their parents) for a degree, completed in four years, is $41,636, while the cost jumps to $60,264 if the degree takes six years. Similarly, the cost to the state jumps from $24,948 to $31,752 per student (Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, 1996).

The Office of Institutional Research and Assessment conducted an Extender Student Survey in the Fall of 2010. The phone survey included 790 students from the Fall 2006 cohort who had not graduated yet and were enrolled in Fall 2010. This report details the results of the Extender Student Survey.

Method

Participants

The population for this survey were the 790 Fall 2006 cohort students who had not yet graduated and were enrolled in Fall 2010. Almost a fifth (19.1%, n=151) of the students had a bad phone number, and 42.9% (n=339) could not be contacted. Of the 325 contacted, 31.1% (n=93) refused to complete the survey. Two hundred thirty-two completed the survey for a response rate of 71.4%.

Table 1 provides a comparison of the demographics between the survey participants and the cohort.

Procedure

The survey was conducted by the Southeastern Center for Social Science Research. It was administered by phone, using trained and experienced student interviewers. The survey was conducted Monday-Thursday evenings from 5:00 p.m. - 9:00 p.m. Some phone calls were attempted during the day; however very few interviews were completed during this time, because the students in the sample could not be reached.

Instrument

The survey contained four sections. The first section addressed the level of student satisfaction with the university in areas such as friendliness of faculty and staff and sense of community. The second section gave a list of thirty-five possible reasons why a student might take longer than four years to graduate and asked participants to rate whether it was a major reason, a minor reason, or not a reason at all. This section included items such as having to drop courses because of dissatisfaction with the teachers and taking classes unrelated to the major because of general interest. The third section asked participants how much time they spend on activities such as working, attending classes/labs, studying/homework, and commuting in a typical week. The final section asked for demographic information that is not collected as a part of the application or registration process, such as the number of children a student has and how far they have to travel to campus. The entire survey can be found in Appendix A.

Results

Who are Extender Students?

The last portion of the survey asked participants for demographic information that is not readily available as part of the student record system. Answers to these questions help give a better understanding as to what type of student will take more than four years to graduate. Over 80% of the respondents have never been married, and three-fourths did not have children under the age of 18. More than a third of the respondents travel more than 30 miles (one way) to Southeastern's main campus, while only 3% live on campus. Almost 60% of the respondents work off campus, an additional 6% work both on and off campus, and 13% work on campus. Of those who worked, a fourth spend more than 30 hours a week working, with an additional 30% spending 21-30 hours a week working. The majority of extender students (57%) receive financial aid. Most of the financial aid is in the form of loans and scholarships, with 63% of financial aid recipients receiving a loan and 57% receiving a scholarship. Also, 42% received a Pell Grant, 12% received a grant other than a Pell, and 9% received tuition and fee waivers. Approximately one-third of the respondents are first-generation college students, which according to Terenzini et al (1996) is a student who has no parent with any college or university experience.
